Führer's Day Festivities

By: Axel Braun

Yesterday, everyone proudly flew their flags to commemorate a very special occasion – the Führer's birthday. It was a day full of burning and cheering! The day was filled with activities that began in the early morning and lasted throughout the entire day. There was a special Nazi speaker who came to the town to oversee the festivities of the day. The town's children gathered in the Hitler's Youth Uniforms and gave a very enthusiastic and loud "Heil Hitler" to kick off the festivities. Next, there was a huge birthday cake brought out by some of the towns' best bakers. The celebration continued with a parade, marching, singing and dancing. All of these events led up to the biggest event of the day – the book burning.

By: Axel Braun

Some people were calling this event the best day of the year. Everyone gathered in the street to watch the parade and to gleefully celebrate the birthday of their wonderful leader. Nazi flags were waved in the air and "Heil Hitler" rained through the crowd. It truly was a day of celebration.

After the parade everyone remained in the streets for dancing and singing. The festivities went on for hours, but the people were most excited about the big book burning at the end of the day.

In this picture you can see young women gathered to watch the parade. They proudly show their support by waving miniature Nazi flags and smiling as the photographer passed by.

This is a picture of some very important Party members who gathered to give a speech at yesterday's celebration. They were well received by the crowd and welcomed with a salute and "Heil Hitler".

“This is the biggest event of the year, everyone from the town is here and having a good time.”
-Frau Diller, candy shop owner

“I am most excited to see the parade and then watch the great big fire!”

-Emma Steiner

Book Burning Brings Huge Crowd

By: Alec Müller

The Nazi military began their day by going door to door asking for any books that could be used for the book burning later that evening. Families were proud to give up any non-approved literature in support of the Führer. The houses and businesses on the Jewish street were also raided in search of any filthy Jewish literature that could be burned. All of these books were piled up in the center of town and sat there waiting for the burning celebration to begin.

Speeches were given in honor of the Führer's birthday and everyone yelled, "Heil Hitler" in celebration of their beloved leader. After the salute to Hitler some of the Nazi Generals put torches to the books and lit them up in a huge bonfire. The crowd stood watching as in awe of the beauty and pride of getting rid of such filthy literature.

The large crowd gathered by the burning pile of books

A German soldier stands near the flaming pile of books and throws in enemy propaganda.

The crowd happily tosses enemy propaganda into the fire and stands there to watch it burn.

“ I didn’t understand why they were burning books. I love to read. But you couldn’t turn away, the beauty was over powering. ”

-Liesel Meminger

“ I was trampled by the crowd and they broke my ankle, but it was such a fun celebration that I decided to stay and watch anyway. ”

-Rudy Steiner

Guards had to control the crowd because everyone wanted to stand close to the fire to watch it burn. The crowd was so large that it became difficult to corral at times.

New reports of stolen crops

By: Hans Dachau

Two local farmers have reported stolen crops within the last week. A local potato farmer states, "it is definitely humans messing with the fields because none of the plants are damaged. If and animal did it there would be a much bigger mess." A local apple orchard owner also reported stolen crops. He claims he witnessed four or five young children climbing the trees a few rows away from where he was harvesting. They must have spotted him at the same time and they ran for the fence trying to escape. Most of them were able to climb the fence with ease but one young boy got caught in the barbed wire. He claims he did not recognize any of the children but warns that they will not get away the next time.

This is evidence showing that someone has been breaking into local farm areas to steal crops. If you look closely you can see someone's clothing snagged on the barbed wire as they were trying to escape.

Bombing Wipes Out Entire Street

By: Thomas Stein

There were no sirens and no warning. It was completely silent on Himmel Street that night – until the bombs hit. Ten planes rained bombs on the area and leveled seven streets in the area. Because the warning did not come until after the first bomb hit, the sleeping residents had no time to get to their nearest bomb shelter. Nearly all of the buildings were leveled and most of the residents died in the bombings.

Cleanup crews had virtually lost all hope for finding survivors until they heard a faint echo sound coming from under the rubble. A small girl was hammering a paint can with a pencil. They moved the rubble and got the little girl out of the tiny basement, her name was Liesel Hubermann. She began searching for her family, but everyone was gone. The poor girl lamented over the loss of everyone on her street – all of her beloved family and friends were dead. Because she is a foster child, authorities have tried to contact the adoption agency to see if the girl has any remaining relatives who could take her in. Unfortunately they have lost contact with the mother and have never had contact with the father. Luckily, the mayor's house a few blocks over was not hit by the bombs and the mayor's wife Ilsa has agreed to take Liesel in and raise her.

Obituaries

HUBERMANN

Hans Hubermann was killed in the bombing of Himmel Street. He is survived by his daughter Trudy Hubermann and his foster child Liesel Meminger whom he loved more than words can explain. Hans was a painter by trade but his true passion lied in rolling cigarettes and playing the accordion.

HUBERMANN

Rosa Hubermann was also killed in the Himmel Street bombing. She and Hans had been married for a very long time and had two children and a foster child. Her daughter Trudy and her foster child Liesel are her only surviving family. Rosa ran a laundry service for most of the people on her street until the times got hard and people could no longer pay her. Her specialty was making pea soup.

Obituaries

MEMINGER

Werner Meminger died of illness and malnourishment at the age of seven. Him, his mother, and his sister were all traveling by train when he passed away. He is survived by his older sister Liesel Meminger who loved him dearly.

STEINER

Rudy Steiner died at the age of fourteen in the bombing of Himmel Street. He has no remaining family and is survived only by his best friend Liesel Meminger. Rudy was a very athletic young man whose passion was running track. His favorite track star and role model was an African-American Olympian named Jessie Owen. Rudy spent most of his days going to school, playing street soccer, and trying to get a kiss from the love of his life, Liesel.
